John C. Slaughter, Lance Corporal, Serial Number 5776255, served in Company "C", 6th Battalion, Royal Norfolk Regiment, British Army; age 26; in British Army for six years; captured by the Japanese at Singapore on 15 February 1942; served in work battalions in seven Japanese prison camps in Thailand on the construction of a military railroad. The ship on which Source was being transported to Japan was sunk off the Philippines on 21 September 1944 and Source was one of 63 rescued. He was again imprisoned by the Japanese, this time at Cabanatuan Prison in Manila, where he was rescued by United States troops on 30 January 1945. Source was transported to the United States on 25 February 1945 and is presently hospitalized at Birmingham General Hospital, Van Nuys, California.

Based upon personal experience as a prisoner of the Japanese from 15 February 1942 until 30 January 1945, Source described the prison camps at which he had been stationed during that period. (See sketch, inclosure #1 for location of prison camps.)

SINGAPORE:

Source stated that after the surrender of the Singapore Garrison to the Japanese on 15 February 1942, the entire garrison, with the exception of the Indian troops was marched to Changi, where British troops had formerly been garrisoned. There they remained for three weeks; during the first and second week, the prisoners of war ate the rations which they had brought with them; during the third week, they were supplied with rice by the Japanese. For the first few days after the surrender, there were no Japanese guards at Changi, but during the last two weeks, Japanese guards patrolled the grounds on bicycles.

Approximately 1000 of the prisoners were then moved to Farrow Park, where they worked on docks, loading and unloading Japanese ships. The treatment they received there was excellent and Source commented on the fact that the Japanese commandant at that camp was well regarded by the prisoners.

After a month and a half, approximately 200 men were sent to Great World, which Source described as a former amusement place in Singapore. There they also worked on the docks, their quarters consisting of bunks within the small shops in the former amusement area. Source remained here until June 1942.

BANFONG:

Source stated that in June 1942, 650 prisoners of war were moved by train from Singapore to Banpong, in Thailand. They were housed at Banpong in bamboo huts, 100 men to a hut, with stagnant water on the floors of each of the huts. The days were spent in digging latrines and performing other construction work around the camp. Source observed that in this prison camp, death was ordered if any of the prisoners of war talked to the civilians; however, no atrocities were committed in this camp.

KANCHANABURI:

The group of 650 prisoners of war were moved by captured British trucks to Kanchanaburi from Banpong, where they remained for only two days. Facilities were limited and many of the men had no place to sleep. The camp was situated near the airfield, which prior to the war had been a commercial field.

CHUNG KIA:

The 650 men were marched from Kanchanaburi to Chung Kia on a trail through a jungle. Source described Chung Kia as being a small native village which had been appropriated by the Japanese, forcing the villagers to move into the jungle. Source observed the natives here were very friendly to the British, supplying them with fruit and cigarettes when they had the opportunity. During the two weeks the group remained here, they started huts for a permanent camp (see sketch, inclosure #2). Lt. Kokabu (Japanese) was commandant of Chung Kia Camp and was in charge of the work parties which were organized there. At this camp, which contained a hospital, a 20 yard square red cross on a white background indicated the presence of the hospital. According to Source, there were approximately 200 Formosan and Korean guards at this camp.

ONE LUN:

Source stated that after two weeks at Chung Kia, the group was moved to One Lun, some four miles north along the Gwe Noi River. At this camp the men were put to work building the railroad. For three months, they cleared the jungle and worked on the bed of the road. Rations at this camp were brought up by barge from Kanchanaburi. A camp rule ordered that only 10% of the men remain in the camp each day, the remainder being required to work on the railroad. During the three months' period the group was at One Lun, ten miles of railroad were built. The camp at One Lun housed approximately two to three thousand men; it consisted of 20 huts with between 100 to 150 men to a hut. In addition, there were two huts which housed the Japanese guards and engineers. No barbed wire surrounded any of these camps as the jungle was so impenetrable, escape was next to impossible. It was at One Lun that British officers were first made to work. They were formed into a battalion and under the pressure of Japanese guards who fired shots over their heads, were put to work on the railroad. Source stated that regular beatings were given to any of the prisoners of war at this camp for any infraction of the rule.

NOTE: This document contains information affecting the national defense of the United States within the meaning of the Espionage Act, 50 U.S.C., 31 and 32, as amended. Its transmission or the revelation of its contents in any manner to an unauthorized person is prohibited by law. It may not be reproduced in whole or in part, by other than War Dept. Agencies, except by permission of the A.C. of S., G-2, W. D. C. S.

In October 1942, Source's group was moved to Tarki Lin which was five miles north of One Lun. Approximately the same number of men were in this work camp as in the former. Tarki Lin was located on the bend of the river and was the site of a small Thailand village. The camp itself was built right in the village and was approximately a mile from the railroad right-of-way. In Source's opinion, this camp will be abandoned, as it appeared to be merely a temporary position. Six long huts housed the two to three thousand prisoners, and the Japanese resided in four smaller huts. Lt. Kokabu was also the camp commandant at this camp. Source recalled that at this camp, the men having malaria were forced to work. Although they received small amounts of quinine, many of them were unable to walk the mile distance to their work; however, they had no alternative as a certain number had to report each day. Beatings were administered frequently by the Korean and Formosan guards. On one occasion, Thailand men who had brought food to the prisoners were beaten by the guards and forced to stand outside the guardroom for several days in the boiling sun. Many of the men died at this camp, but Source was unable to make any estimation of the exact number. There were no military installations at Tarki Lin. Supplies were brought in by wooden barges pulled by diesel tugs, and the camp was under the guard of approximately 50 Japanese.

NUMBRA DYE:

From December 1942 to February 1943, Source was in the work camp at Numbra Dye. He described this as the worst of all the labor camps along the railroad. It was only three miles from Tarki Lin. Dysentery and disease killed many of the British soldiers and they were buried in the jungle. Approximately 1000 men were in this camp where they were housed in tents. No village was near Numbra Dye, the camp being merely a temporary site for the railroad workers. There were no latrines available to the men, and the stench from the camp could be detected a mile away. Source stated there were no military installations at Numbra Dye.

ONE POE SOUTH:

Source stated that One Poe South is the southern section of three camps: One Poe North, One Poe Central, and One Poe South. The latter is situated six miles from Numbra Dye and had approximately 30 guards. It housed approximately 2000 men and it also had no barracks, the men sleeping in tents. Source remained at this camp for only a week, when malaria left him too weak to work. Source was returned by barge to Chung Kia, stopping en route at the town of Ban Kao which was two miles from the railroad camp at Tarki Lin.

At Chung Kia, Source was hospitalized from February 1943 until May 1944. He stated that approximately 1800 men were in the hospital (which consisted of barracks set aside for the purpose), treatment being given them by British doctors. Cholera broke out at Chung Kia and Source estimated that several thousand prisoners died and were buried in the cemetery there. Source stated that 15 or 16 British dead were burned each day in an attempt to prevent the spread of cholera.

EN ROUTE TO JAPAN:

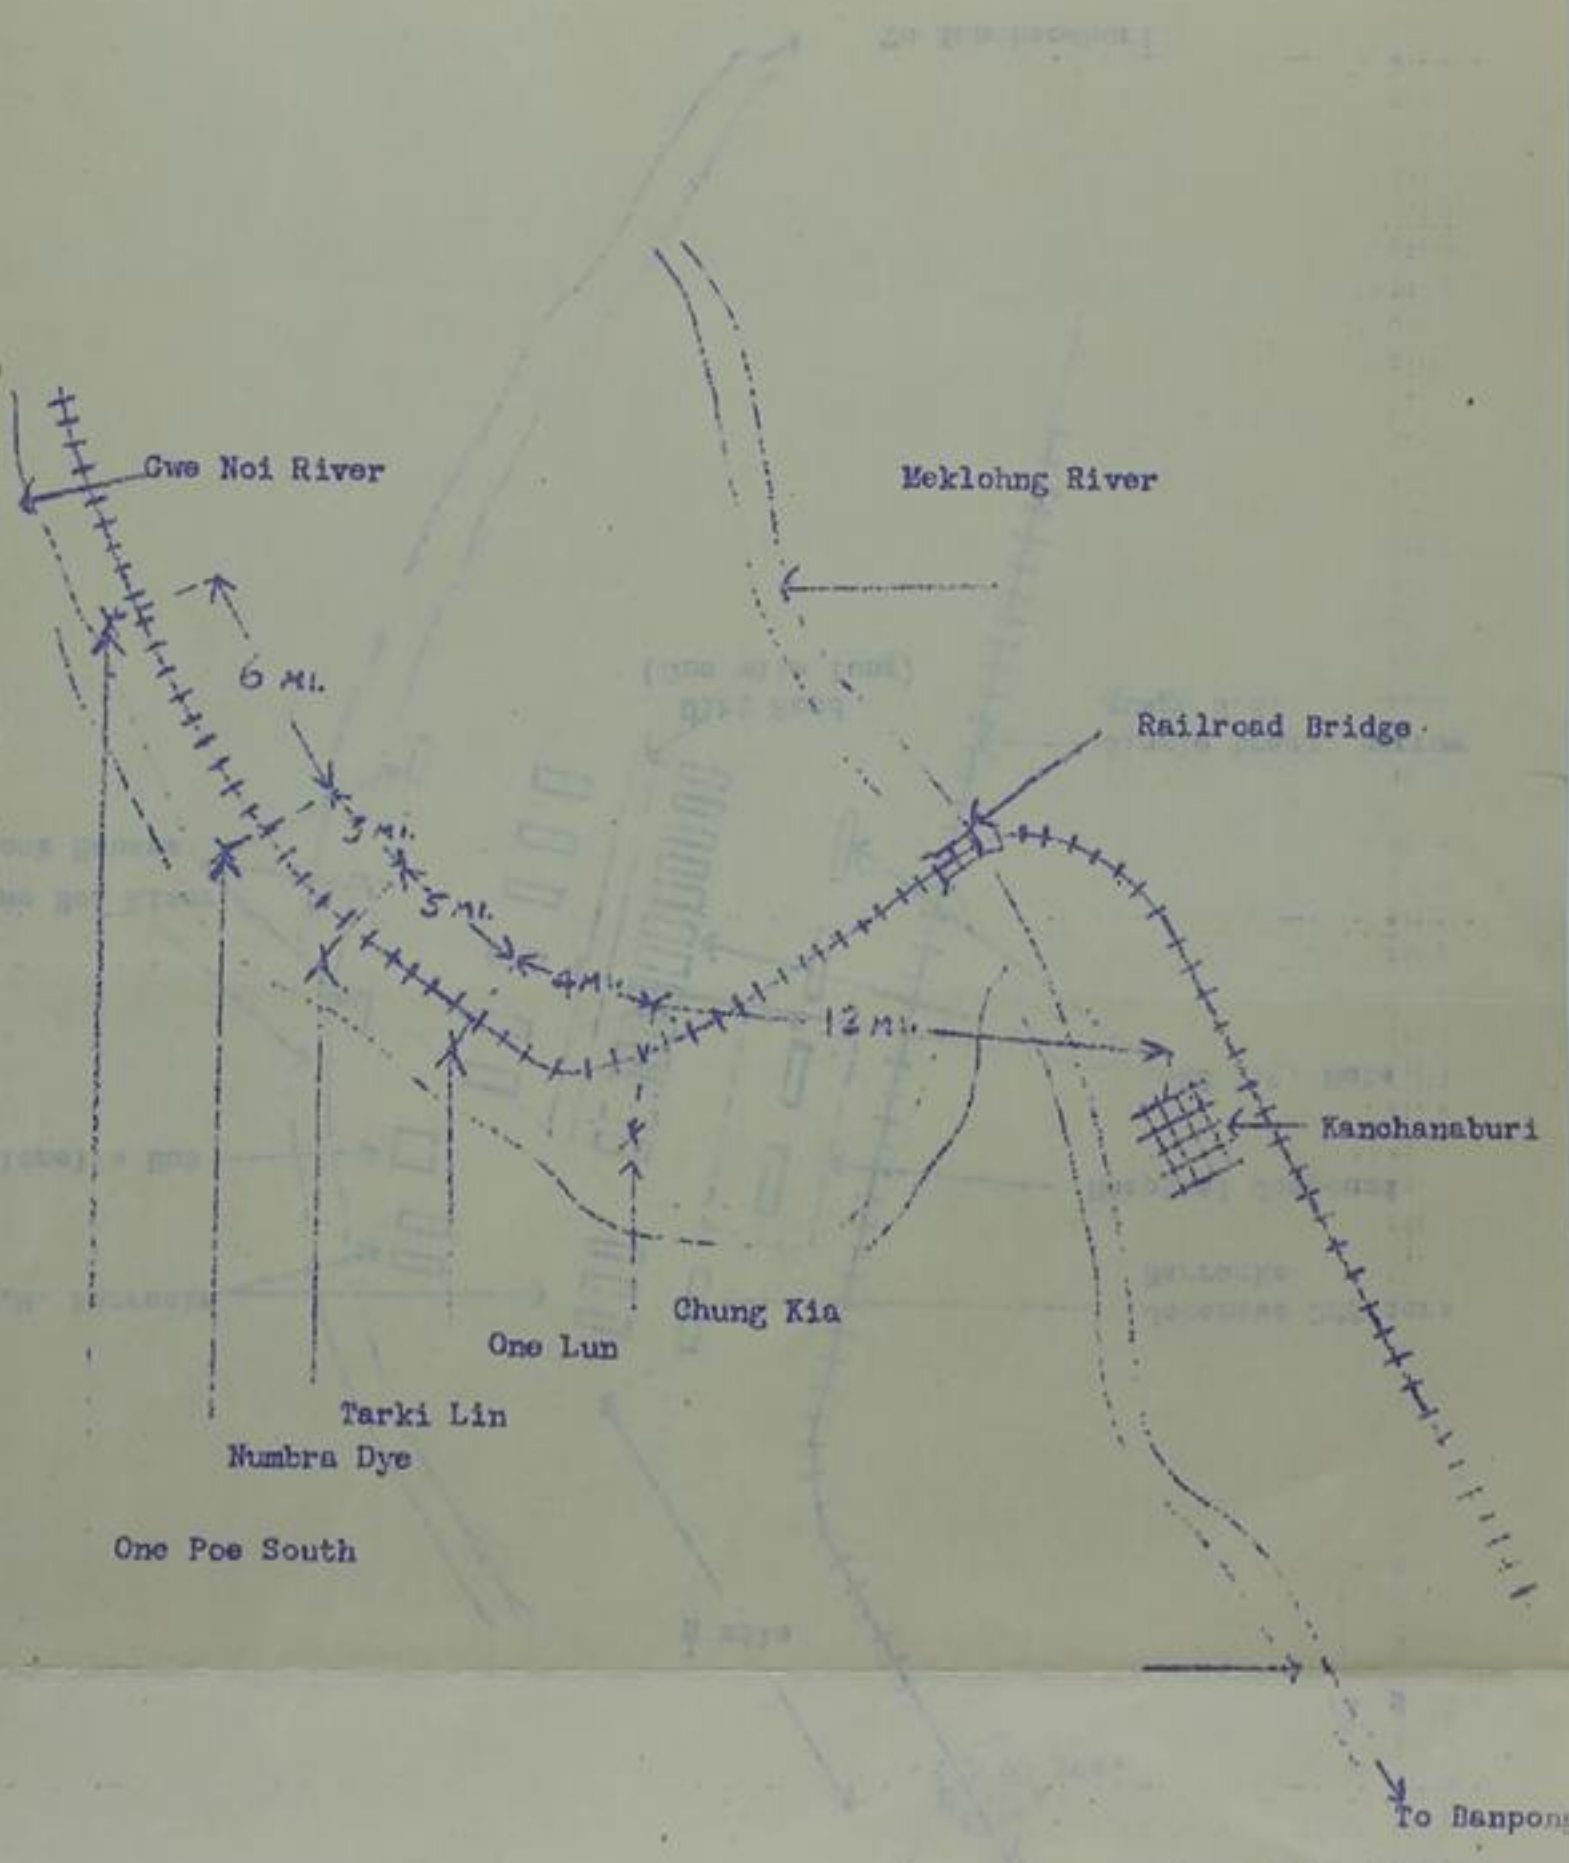

Source stated that in May 1944, 1250 of the prisoners at Chung Kia who were the most physically fit were moved by rail to Singapore in two trains to be sent to Japan as a labor battalion. The group was kept for ten days at the Havelock Road Prison Camp in Singapore. Source recalled one instance where Chinese civilians had smuggled in a newspaper to the prisoners in which the news of the Normandy Invasion was carried. These Chinese were caught by the Japanese guards and were severely beaten for this act. The group left Singapore in June 1944 in a 9000-ton cargo vessel. The ship was in a convoy of 12 boats with 5 destroyers as escorts. Ten day rations were carried, and the ship headed for Borneo. Before it reached Borneo, the ship broke down and remained there for twenty days before another convoy came along. Prisoners began to starve. They were allowed only small amounts of rice and were given only condensed sea water, as no fresh water was available. After joining up with another convoy, the ship eventually reached Manila Bay. During that period, 90 men had died from starvation and beri-beri. The ship remained in Manila Bay for six weeks, and the men received rations of dried fish and potatoes, but were given no fresh food.

1. The attached sketches and lists were obtained from Captain Ira H. Fowler, 131 F.A. who still retains the original notes and drawings. Captain Fowler made the drawings and buried them for safe-keeping since the Japanese would not permit prisoners of war to retain any written matter.
2. As long as the prisoners of war were in the vicinity, they maintained the cemeteries, but as soon as the prisoners left, the jungle quickly encroached. It is therefore imperative that action be taken if it is desired to move the bodies to a more suitable resting place.
