Needless to say the fundamental policy of the British Government is the maintenance of the integrity of the British homeland and of the British Empire. In order to protect the safety of the homeland it has been Britain's traditional policy to maintain friendly relations with the countries on the channel coast, of the European continent, such as Belgium, Holland, and France, and to maintain a balance of power in Europe. According to this traditional policy Britain declared war on Germany on September 3rd, 1939, and not for the pledge she had given in the form of a Mutual Assistance Pact with Poland. Therefore, when the Soviet Union invaded Eastern Poland, Britain did not go to war with the Soviets.

THE ATTEMPT ON THE LIFE OF HITLER.

During the latter part of July a group of discontented Military Officers plotted to assassinate the Fuehrer Adolf Hitler. The plot failed, however, as the time bomb went off without inflicting any serious injuries on the Reich Fuehrer, although some of his subordinates were seriously injured.

A careful examination of the time-bomb proved that it was of English make. The arch-perpetrator of the crime was also disclosed to have been Count Stauffenberg, an individual who had maintained intimate relations with the British nobility. These two facts apparently clinch the contention, in the eyes of Germany that the plot had originated in England, and that it had been carried out in accordance with instructions from the enemy. The would be assassins, were, of course, caught immediately, and summarily punished.

Whatever the objective of the would-be assassins may have been, the attempted assassination on the life of Reichfuehrer Hitler has done more than anything else to unite the German people behind their great leader. By damping the morale of the German nation, this incident has increased the determination of the German people to fight the war to the bitter end. - (M)
