

SC-224823 Red Cross package boxes that were filled with sand and used as a protection against incendiary fires at Tsumori POW camp in Osaka, Honshu, Japan. The POWs did this of their own accord as there was no effective means of fire prevention in the camp [Tsumori_1]

SC-224822 Sign that designates which group is sleeping in stall at Tsumori POW Camp in Osaka. The men were segregated according to what particular work they did and were given a group number. [Tsumori_1]

SC-224821 Interior of barracks at the Tsumori POW Camp, showing where the men slept. There were twelve men living in these stalls sleeping on mats. There was approximately two feet of space allotted for each man. This is one of two types of barracks that were used in this particular camp and might be considered as model barracks of its type in any camp, used as such when high ranking Jap officers made inspections. The walls of this particular stall were burned by fire from the incendiaries dropped by American planes. [Tsumori_1]
